Which Was Happiest?

It was the morning before Thanksgiving and Farmer Mathews was happy. His fall work was finished; the potatoes were piled up high in the bins; the attic was filled with barrels of red and green apples, nuts and bags of pop-corn; bag after bag of wheat lay piled up in the barn where the hay was stacked high for the horses. There were oats, too, in the bins, and from one window he could see, in a meadow beyond this well-filled barn, the corn and other grains that had not been brought in.

Walking to another window and looking out, all of the sunshine faded out of his eyes and his face became cloudy and dark. Away across the meadow was a little house, where lived a mother, father and four children who were not expecting to have any Thanksgiving, because they were too poor. They had no nice warm clothes nor anything to eat, and the farmer with his cellar, attic and barn all filled with good things knew that he ought to divide with these poorer neighbors but he did not want to. No, he had all he wanted and had worked hard for it, too, without any one to help him and he was not going to give it away—"They can just go to work themselves and make enough to eat and keep themselves warm," he thought.

Oh how unhappy he was, though, as he sat himself down in a chair and buried his face in his hands. He had not sat this way very long before he found his way into dream-land. Here he met a tiny fairy the first thing; a fairy with the brightest of golden hair and dresses and with a little crown of glittering light on her head, that hurt his eyes as he stopped to speak to her.

"Who are you?" said he. "Don't you know me?" said she. "Why, I am one of the sunbeam fairies who helped your corn to grow and dried your hay and worked for you all summer." Farmer Mathews looked puzzled as he said, "Did you really work so hard for me?"

"Yes, if it had not been for me and my company of busy people your barn would be entirely empty," said the little golden fairy as she fluttered away just in time for the farmer to see at his feet a queer company of little brown dwarfs who were huddled

1913 MODELS OF THE INDIAN MOTORCYCLE

Following the "14 Important Improvements" of 1912, the Hendee Mfg. Company announce no less than a dozen additional new features in their 1913 model of the Indian Motorcycle.

By far the most significant feature of the new machine is the Cradle Spring Frame. It is something entirely new, a radical departure from the conventional bicycle and recent motorcycle systems of "springing." Briefly, the new device consists of the application to the rear wheel of the Indian Cradle Spring device as used on the front fork for the past three years.

Extending back horizontally from the frame joint cluster under the saddle, flanking the rear mud guard, are two 7-leaf Chrome Vanadium steel springs. The "C" shaped curls at the rear end of these springs are connected by stays to bell-cranks on which the rear axle is hung. The forward end of the rear fork has a hinge joint which enables the rear wheel to yield to imperfections of road surface. All shocks are completely absorbed by the leaf springs. The rear wheel can go through almost any vertical motion without affecting the body of the machine. There is no "bottom" to this spring device. The life of the machine is greatly increased.

The Engineering Department of the Hendee Mfg. Co. devoted 18 months of exhaustive test to the Cradle Spring Frame before finally deciding on its adoption for all models of the 1913 Indian.

In addition to the Cradle Spring Frame, the 1913 Indian embodies 10 other important improvements which will be appreciated by motorcycle riders in general. Prices remain the same as last year.

New style, single clinch rims; larger tires, wider mud guards front and rear with larger splashes; casing for upper stretch of transmission chain and curve of sprocket; larger luggage carrier in rear, fitted to all models; foot rests, as well as pedals, fitted to regulate 4 h. p. and 7 h. p. models; foot break lever fitted on left side now operates band brake as well as the pedal action; larger size multiple disc clutch now fitted to all models alike; improved Indian type saddle.

All 1913 Indians will be chain driven and finished in Indian red only.
